Concerning their vniust persecution by the enemies of the Estate and of their Religion. Together with their lawfull and necessary defence.

WE the Deputies in the Generall Assembly of the Reformed Churches of France and the Principallitie of Bearn, persecuted by the enemies of the Estate and of their Religion, who abuse the Kings mind and conscience, seeing that to our great grieve we are constrained by the violence of oppression to haue recourse vnto naturall and lawfull meanes (by a necessary defence) to preserve the libertie of our consciences and the safetie of our liues against these our implacable enemies: We protest in the name of the said Churches before God and men, inuolably to remaine vnder the subiection of our King, acknowledging that he is giuen vs of God to be our soueraigne Lord. And that all the world may take notice that as this obedience, next vnto the worship of God, is the onely aime of our intention, sufficiently manifested by our former fidelitie ingrauen in the pillars of our Estate, and in the crownes of our late Kings, raised vp againe by our predecessors and our selues, notwithstanding the endeours of our enemies factions: also the hatred and persecution which we now endure, is raised vp for no other cause by our enemies, but for this holy and iust action; whereunto they know we are inseparably bound, by the rules of our Religion, by the example of our progenitors, and the right of our owne conseruation.

First of all then we beseech the King and all true French men, as also all Kings, Princes and Potentates, friends and confederates of the Crowne, and generally all men who are touched with the zeale of Gods glorie, with commiseration of innocencie troden vnder foote, and with griefe for the miseries which at this day threaten France: to informe themselves here of our iust complaints, that in them they may see the perfidiousnesse of our enemies and their crueltie, and which (whether we will or no) they pull out of our bosome, and binde vs to publish for the iustification of our innocencie, and to let all such as loue iustice and truth see, that the refuge of our defence whereunto we are brought, is both necessary and iust; our enemies being thrust forward by no other motiue to kindle the fire in this kingdome, then to put out the light of our Religion, and to ouerthrow the most sure resistance which in the Estate may be opposed to forrein enterprises. But because by their wonted subtilties they haue here followed the common course which tends to violence and crueltie, making to themselves a way by false accusations to the oppression of a iust cause. And for a pretence to invade vs, they haue proclaimed vs rebels and seditious; and to spread euery where this accusation, they employ the Edicts and declarations of the King and of the Parliaments, yea and the mouth of Ambassadors in forrein parts. To the end that the simplicitie of those who are least informed either of the hatred, or of the power, or of the craft of our enemies, might not receiue some sinister impression of vs; touching the dutie of obedience and fidelitie towards our King and country: we will shew here that all the pretences and iniurious crimes wherewith they charge vs, are meerly artificiall disguisings borrowed as a veile to couer the outrages done to innocencie. For as to inflame the hatred of Kings and the furie of the people against the Gospell, they haue heretofore accused the first Christians, & our fathers in these last times of like crimes, namely that they transgressed against the decrees of Cesar, moued sedition among the people, and did ouerthrow the royaltie of Princes. Vnder these supposed accusations they haue caused them to suffer euery where the violence of the sword, the burning of fire, the crueltie of massacres, the furie of warres, and the horror of all sorts of exquisite torments. It is true, that as our fathers were more weake and naked, or exposed to a more easie slaughter, Religion then was directly charged with these crimes, and then they haue persecuted and made open war vpon them for their professions sake. But now by a subtiltie fitted to their intentions, our enemies haue altered the method. They enterprise warre vpon the persons, to breake in vpon Religion. And because that after so many perfidious and cruell practises, the arme of God hauing raised vs vp, as out of our fathers ashes, and by the miraculous prosperitie of the late King (conducted by our fidelitie vpon the throne of this monarchie) the breaches of the Estate being repaired, that there might be established a firme peace, an Edict was granted vs for the libertie of our consciences, and places of safetie to preferue our goods and liues against the violence which the former euils made vs feare for the time to come: truly it were now too an apparent violating of peace, and they should too manifestly declare themselves enemies of the quiet of France, if openly this Edict made in fauour of vs, should be reuoked, and if they should make war vpon vs for Religion. It were also to ingage too many persons in one selfe same cause. For these causes to couer their projected purpose of the ruine of this Estate through ours, to arme the King against vs, and to destroy vs with greater ease then otherwise they could possibly do. They haue proclaimed vs rebels and offenders, they haue endeououred to make this cause more particular; they call the warre they make vpon vs a chastisement of seditious persons. But when we shall haue here made plaine to the eyes of all the world the purpose of those who are authors of these troubles and confusions; the long oppression we haue hitherto endured with all patience; the euidences of our right in the course we haue held in our complaints, and most humble suites made to our King, now laid against vs as a crime: Lastly y^e open persecutioⁿ which at this instant they inflict vpon vs by the armies already raised against vs in all the parts of this kingdome where they thinke we are able any way to resist, We hope that we shall cleare our innocencie from these slanders, shall approue our iust and necessary defence, which we vndertake, waiting for the help and blessing of the Almighty. And finally we shall obtaine fauour and assistance from all such as loue his glorie and the truth: and the succour and helpe of whosoever they be that desire the conseruation of this poore kingdome.

The intent of our enemies, and the meanes
to attain thereto

Since the most sure stay of the Edict for our safetie, established by the mightie hand of the late King, fell by the stroke of his death; the enemies of our Religion and of the publike peace, liting vp themselves with more hope of going forward and of bringing their purposes to passe, turned all their endeouours to overthrow this foundation of the tranquillitie of the State: knowing that the surest way to bring againe the confusion of troubles and of the forepassed warres, was to destroy the Edict which had destroyed them. But not being able to promise to themselves that the good inclinations of the King, and the wisdom of his Mother then Regent, and all well affected Frenchmen interested in the peace of the kingdome, would consent, or could suffer an open breach of the Edict, they sought to gaine by pece-meale that which they could not obtaine in the whole summe: and by sleights and more secret practices to cause things to fall into the gulf, whereinto now they haue throwne them.

The first groundworke of their plot did bewray it selfe with astonishment and iust apprehension of all of vs, when in the coronation of the King they made him take this oath: I will truly endeavour to my power to exclude from my iurisdiction and lands vnder my subiection, all heretickes so denounced by the Church. As if he took his Crowne vnder this con-condition and vnder this law; that he should roote vs out when he could do it. The blood of that great Henrie crieth yet for vengeance for the furious and abominable murderer, who protested and affirmed that the onely reason why he murdered him, was because he was a fauourer of hereticks, that he suffered them in his kingdome, that he put them not to the sword: and here they haue caused his son and successor, to promise that he shall employ all his power to roote vs out. By this powerfull and effectuell reason they did ingraue in the Kings heart from his most tender yeares the necessitie of hating and destroying vs; and besides the horror of the example of his Father cruelly slaine for maintaining peace with those who are called hereticks, they take of him a solemne promise to raigne and sit vpon his throne vnder this condition to persecute those whom his father conserued and kept. For who is ignorant that vnder the name of heretickes, they meane vs? That we are proclaimed and stiled such by the Roman Church? And therefore if the King be bound to the obseruation of this oath according to their intention, what may we not then feare? Wherefore vpon former experience ought we not to feare againe the vnhappie bloodsheds which such impressions and imposed necessities vpon the consciences of Kings, haue caused vs to feele?

The like proiect of our enemies hath yet openly manifested it selfe, when endeouoring to make a fundamentall law to passe, and an vniuersall principle of conscience, that we ought not to be suffered in France; they obtained in the last Estates held at Paris, that the houses of the Clergie and Nobilitie should expressely demaund by their roles the execution of this oath of the King, as also the reception and publication thereof by the Councell of Trent. A Councell which hath bin heretofore reiected publikely by those Estates which were held when the most bloodie and violent troubles haue bin stirred vp against vs in this kingdome. A Councell which will not endure that Kings should raigne, if they permit life and libertie in their dominions to those who are called heretickes.

But the most apparent and most sensible proceeding of the project of our malignant enemies, is principally furthered by the seditious sermons of the preaching Iesuites and other Monkes, who, some yeares since, by an vnbridled licence and a manifest conspiracie, contrary to the Edicts and their authoritie, did take vpon them to calumniate vs in their pulpits, and to make vs odious, preaching furie and sedition, nourishing the people in hatred of vs, insinuating them to haue vs in excretion, and inspiring in their mindes warres and murders, do dispose and prepare them vpon all occasions to annoy vs. Hence it is that we continually feele so many violatings of the Edicts of peace, so many breaches which are made in vpon our safetie, so many outrages against our libertie. Notwithstanding we may yet boldly affirme, that our patience might haue overcome and as it were smothered the greatest part of these euils, or at least we might haue conceiued some good hope that in the end some remedies would haue bin provided for vs by the bountie of the King and the wisdom of his most faithfull Counsellers, if the Iesuites were not exalted to the height of power whereunto they are come. For it doth evidently appeare, that by all sorts of violent meanes they haue hitherto procured the rooting out of our Religion, and the ouerthrow of this Monarchie. Principally since their power hath growne to the proportion of their euill will, and that they see all obstacles which heretofore were opposed against their hardy enterprize to be now broken downe or to yeeld vnderneath their power: what other expectation is referred for vs, but to feele the danger wherinto so long a time they haue projected to plunge vs? The miserable face of Christendom at this day almost rent in peeces with warres and horrible confusions, doth manifest sufficiently to all the world what power their wicked and artificiall inductions haue to stirre vp a warre of Religion, almost vniuersall. And who can presume that France alone (which they haue made so often to feele so mournfull wounds by their their trecherous hands) being at this day in their power, and as it were vnder their absolute gouernment, should escape the common accident which they haue caused to fall vpon those Estates where their credit and the diuersitie of Religion haue giuen them pretence and matter to cause trouble. There is no man so vnacquainted with their designs, who hath not heretofore foreseene or foretold, that the miserie and ruine of France drew neare when the counsels of Iesuites should preuaile. And now when on the one side we see them in such high esteeme, and on the other side France brought to the miserie of ciuill warres: is any one so blinde that he confesse it not, to be the worke of their hand? who would seek any other cause or beginning thereof? The feare of falling into these euils, hath caused vs to heare many aduertisements from the wisest and best affected French men, which so long time haue withstood it with all their power. The force of the Parliament of Paris hath oft opposed its authoritie against their enterprises. And the remarkable documents which the iudgement thereof hath spread throughout France soone after the death of the late King, touching the danger and pernicious consequences to the Estate, if they attained to greater credit, did guide the wisdom of the Kings Mother to restrain their ouerboldnes in the Court and in the managing of affaires. And they could neuer obtaine their desires during her regencie, and the authoritie which she had in the gouernment of the Estate.

But as all things fit their turnes who seeke occasion of ^{What power} proceeding, hauing found in the gouernment following the Iesuits haue ^{a more fauourable support,} as they are ready to vent the ^{now in France,} vse of their ministry, helped by the opportunitie, and propt with that hand, they haue scaled that pinnacle of power, whereon we see them now mounted. Then we saw the boldest Iesuite of the whole Societie brought into the Louure, and with a rashnesse beyond example place himselfe within the house of the Kings sacred Maiestie, that for all houres and moments he might haue the gouerning of him in his owne power. And euer since it hath appeared in the gouernment of the State, what power the Iesuites haue gotten ouer the Kings affections. By two notable proofes soon after this Iesuites introduction, it might easily be perceiued, that thenceforth nothing should be impossible to those of his Societie, whatsoever they would vndertake for themselues or against vs. The necessitie of this discourse requireth that we represent them.

All France may well remember, that three dayes after this Iesuite had got the Kings eare, they caused his Councell to cancell the Act of Parliament, by the which the opening of their Colledge in Paris was interdicted them, vntill such time as they had publicly renounced their principles of the ruine of States and killing of Kings. And to shew that all opposition to their violence should thenceforth be vaine, by an Order from the Councell (by them set vp in euery quarter of Paris in signe of triumph) they caused the Decrees of the Vniuersitie (which had somewhat resisted them) to be annulled. With like facilitie, and at the same time, they obtained an Act in fauour of the Bishops of Bearn the 25 of Iune 1617. for the restoring of all Ecclesiasticall goods of that Country, which by a solemne establishment decreed by the Soueraigne and Parliament, were ordained for the maintenance of our Pastors, Colledge, Garrisons, Officers, and other charges of the country. 15 yeares together the Bishops had followed this suite with all possible instance. The late King sundry times solicited from Rome in their behalf, knowing wel the consequences of such a change, bound also by his oath to innouate nothing (beside the libertie of Exercise giuen to the Roman Catholicks, with restitution of so much Ecclesiasticall goods as was needfull for them, granted by Edict, and executed in the yeare 1599) had alwayes refused it them. The Queene mother of the King, for like considerations, and because of the same oath taken by her Maiestie now raigning, for the maintenance of the ancient establishment (confirmed ouer and aboue by twelue seuerall Patents and and Declarations obtained against the instance that the Bishops made on the contrary) would not meddle with it. The project of our enemies could not be better advanced then by a blow of this nature. For they knew that the execution of this Restitution would draw after it (as, alas, it is come to passe) the subuersion of the countrey, and the vtter ruine of our Religion in the same, with hope that with the sparkles they should kindle there, they might set all France on fire. Wherefore they drew the King by his conscience, and by vrging his oath, touching the rooting out of all Religion contrary to his, to make that Decree by prerogative: which for this cause (though giuen rashly, without the aduice of the principall Officers of the Crowne and State in a businesse of such consequence, and against the course of Law vpon the onely pursuite of the Bishops, without hearing the Deputies of the country) would neuer be called in, notwithstanding all the remonstrances and supplications that could since be presented, which haue not bene otherwise answered, then that the authoritie and conscience of the King stood engaged in it. Thence we gathered a wofull experience of the Kings inclination in those affaires that most concerne his State and our safetie. Seeing that this Iesuite held all his affections bound with respects of Religion, and that deuotion vnto which his Maiestie out of an inbred goodnesse is naturally giuen, was as a spring vnto his conscience, by the which he inclineth his whole will to what pleaseth him best. Hee hath made himselfe the Counsell of the Kings conscience (to vse his owne phrase): and in this Counsell can he propound other Maximes then those of Rome? that may be all reduced to this head of the subuersion of this State and our ruine. He giues him for a law the determination of the Council of Constance; That faith is not to be kept with hereticks. That whatsoever Edicts he hath made or sworne, bind him not. That therefore he may, nay that he ought to brake them. And the better to induce him, he reades him no other Lecture then the oath of his Coronation. Propounds him no greater merit to be rewarded with Paradise, then the rooting out of Heretickes. Incites him to seeke that way a more glorious renowne, then euer S. Lewis got by warring with the Infidels. These and such like are the counsels of conscience of this Iesuite. By the which his Maiestie setting aside all other considerations of his gouernment, hath let himselfe be caried away, and hath often said, It is better to lose his Estate then his soule. Taught (it seemes) to hold it for a Maxime, that there are occasions of sauing his soule with the losse of his kingdome. Now from the possession of the Kings will, enclosed thus within the hand of the Iesuites, they haue drawne to themselves by a necessary consequence, the whole gouernment of the State. Which they haue compassed the easier, by reason that all the sage and old Counsellors and Officers that serued the late King, and France, in the establishment and maintenance of the prosperitie and greatnesse which it was raised to vnder his reigne, being now (as we see) put from all managing of affaires; they to whom the Kings abundant fauour giues all authoritie in the gouernment, do willingly consent, that the directing of the Counsell be committed to the Popes Sollicitors, Cardinals and Bishops. And such as yet remaine, or as are newly brought in, some nurtured with the leuen of old Spanish factions and affections, others won with the aduantageous liberalities of the new, or with Romish honours (whereof the Iesuites are the chiefe brokers) concurre all together in one and the same consent, touching the subuersion of whatsoeuer the late King had established, but chiefly for so much as concernes vs. And these allurements haue bene of such efficacie, that he from whom the best expected an vnvariable affection to peace and good gouernment, in hope of a Church-dignitie, hath deuoted himselfe to be an instrument of the first breach, through which, persecution hath rushed in vpon vs. On the other side, the high and inferiour Courts, and all Magistrates of the kingdome are filled with such persons as are wholly subiected to them; either by superstition, or by interest of for-fortune. The people haue no other affections then such as they suggest vnto them by their sermons or by their priuate confessions.

The power then of our enemies being such, we haue also, to our dammage, felt the effects of it by a contrary vsage to that that we found vnder the late King. For since they haue got this authoritie (we might very well say, since their reigne) there is no more fauour nor accesse at Court for those of our Religion. Many to whom their fathers seruices and their owne had thitherto preserued them the honour of some places neare the King, haue bene put by them. The greater part are constrained to rid themselves of them, vnder this command, Change your Religion, or leaue your Office. It is told them that the King cannot with a good eye see the Huguenots about his person. In the Priuie Councel our greatest opposites are our Iudges; and they whom we petition, are our sworne enemies. We are shut out of Offices in all Courts higher or lower, against the freedome of the Statutes. If any one that is now in place turnes of our Religion, presently the Attourneys Generall or their substitutes oppose his sitting. The Courts contest with him, and repulse him. And how many are there in the Court of Parliament at Paris and elsewhere, who are detained from comming to vs by the oppression of this libertie? But when should we haue reckoned vp all the kindes of iniuries done vnto vs? The seditious insolencies dayly committed to hinder the free exercise of our Religion in those places where we are tollerated. The attempts and enterprises against such places as haue bin giuen vs in custody for our securitie. The secret practises to debauch the Gouvernours of them, as it is newly confirmed in the Gouvernours of Clermont, Ledeue and Argenton. The refusall of prouiding for the restitution of those places. The riots and outrages that those of our Religion suffer in citie and country by the fury of the people, prouoked by their Preachers. The sauaiges and firing of our Churches and Church-yards. The inhumanities exercised in digging vp our dead, and hinddring their buriall. The violence offered sick-folkes consciences, euen in the agony of death, thereby to force them to renounce their Religion. The crueltie exercised on our poore and sicke, who are cast out of Hospitals. The vniust force practised in robbing vs of our children to bring them vp in the Roman Religion, against their fathers intent and last will. To be short, all manner of wrongs and violences are done vs, against the Kings authoritie, and publik peace and tranquillitie.

In all these mischiefes we haue no other recourse then to our complaints, which we continually direct to the Magistrates, either of the Prouinces or of the high Courts. But there, alas, in stead of remedies we finde poison. For not onely they send vs backe, and doe vs no right; but the iniustice wherewith they aggravate the former iniury, augments their boldnesse that did vs the wrong, encouraged by their impunitie, and by the law that they gather from the Iudges themselves.

Our proceeding by complaint, which now is imputed vnto vs as a crime,

Our last refuge is to the Kings iustice and Officers of State, whither (forced by the hard vlage we finde every where) we flie as to our sanctuary: and there our enemies oppole our accessse with their vtmost violence. They perceiue that the Kings protection would defend vs against all their iniuries. They know that our course by complaints, which nature opens vnto every one, would shroud vs vnder the couert of his iustice, where both our rest and the publike tranquillitie should be preferued. And therefore we finde their conspiracie to be the more malicious. For not onely they stop his Maiesties eare, and barre vs from all passage thereunto; but when we offer to approach it by our most humble petitions and requests, they lay for vs. by a more then diuellish subtiltie, the snare of their calumnie, to make vs fall into the blame of a pretended disobedience. They turne our complaints into crimes: they terme vs seditious and rebels. This is the accusation for the which they pursue vs criminally. This is the accusation, for the which they now persecute vs. We here call heauen and earth to witness witnesse betweene our enemies and vs, desiring that the procedure of our complaints to his Maiestie, which we will here truly and fully lay open, being knowne to all, men may iudge of our innocencie, and of the calumnie of their accusation; and finally of the vniust warre and persecution which our aduersaries vnder this pretext haue raised against vs.

For the maintaining of the Ediſt of peace and reparation of the breaches thereof, the late King did establish according to his equitie an order among vs, by the which we might from time to time with his permission and grant assemble our selues by Deputies out of all the Prouinces, to tender him our complaints of all such grieuances as might be done vs, and receiue from his bountie reasonable answers, and such as should be necessary for the keeping of his Ediſts. According to this order, feeling a more vrgent necessitie then euer, we addressed our selues vnto his Maiestie by our Deputies generall in the year 1619, and it pleased his Maiestie to grant vs, according to our most humble request, a Briefe, by the which we were permitted to assemble our selues in the Citie of Loudun the 25 of September. Where being met together out of all the Prouinces of the kingdome and Soueraigntie of Bearn, our bills of complaints being drawne, we presented them in all humilitie to his Maiestie, beseeching him that by a fauourable answer to the principall articles and most important grieuances they might carry backe into all the Prouinces, by the testimonials of his good will towards our protection, some assurance to his subiects of the Religion, against so many threats and feares as doe apparently inuiron them. There would neuer be an end, if we should here display the seuerall heads of all those complaints. We will onely touch some of them, to shew their importance, and the necessitie of obtaining speedie iustice vpon them.

We complain that Leytoure a place of suretie hath bin wrestled out of our hands. That two of our Religion prouided of offices of Counsellours in the Court of Parliament of Paris, could not obtaine their admission in three whole yeares pursuite. That the exercise of our Religion being banished Clermont of Lodeue a place of suretie, vpon the reestablisshing of the same sued by vs, the execution of an order from the Kings Counsell was opposed vi & armis. That our Churches haue bene burned or demolished at Bourg in Bresse, at Moulins in Bourbonnois, and at Lauall neare Guise. That at Beaux in Province Monsieur de Vere Capitaine of the Castle, after many threats and outrages, to prohibite and hinder those of the Religion from their exercise, did at last driue them out violently by force of armes the eight of Februarie 1620. That iustice could not be obtained for the excessiue outrages done to some of the Religion at Baugenci, and for ringing the Allarum bell against them; and that the Offenders that threw two men out of a garret, and ran one of them through with a sword, haue bin heard as witnesses to the informations made by the Lieutenant Generall in the iurisdiction of Orleans; and that though the cause was referred to the Parliament of Paris, yet notwithstanding the Attourney Generall in the same hath let the suite fall. That our Pastors haue bin violently expelled the Cities of Bourges and la Chasteigneraye. That diuers persons professing our Religion at Chaalons vpon Saonne, haue bin chased and banished thence, as also out of the Dutchie of Barrois. That the places granted vs for the exercise of our Religion neare the Cities of Lyons, Dijon and Langres; were barred vs. That in those places where the inhabitants haue actually enjoyed the said exercise euer since the yeares 1596. 1597. and therefore haue full liberty by the Edict, are there molested, as at la Chasteigneraye, at la Chastre, at S. Cyprian, la Herle, Velus, Maussac, Langon, Bourg de Conde in Normandie, at Agiene in Viualets, at S. Marcellin in Forest, at la Chaulme in Xaintogne by formal opposition of the Officers, at Florence Picusque, at Montfort and Puget by the Consuls, neare the Towne of Perigueux, at Montignac Charente by order from the Seneschal of Angoumois vpon forfeiture of a thousand franks.

That

That the education of children hath bin taken away from their fathers of our Religion, to instruct them in a contrary, as from the Master of Accompts at Paris; and by order of the Court of Parliament at Roane in the cause of one Couurechef. That many children of the Religion, haue bin stolen away by Monks. As at Ambrun the son of a citizen, at Millaud the sonne of Monsieur Valatte, at Leytoure a boy of ten yeares old, named Francis Aram, by the Iesuite Regour the fourth of Ianuary 1620. That our graues haue bin inhumanely violated, or the burials hindred in diuers places, as at Aix in Prouince, at Gordes, at Mirabeau, at Ongle, at Xaintes, at S. Georges of Oleron, and in many places of Guienne and other parts with crueltie & barbarisme. That our poore sicke haue bin cast out of Hospitals, or their consciences forced, as during the last contagion at Paris, in the Hospitall of Saint Lewes, where many were violented, and all accesse denied our Ministers and Elders to comfort them. That the Parliaments, to the preiudice of the Courts established, haue attributed to themselves the knowledge of our causes, as the Parliament of Bourdeaux diuers times, and particularly in the businesse of the inhabitants of Mas d'Agensis, who thereby haue suffered exceeding great vexations, whereof many of them are dead in prison. But chiefly in criminall causes, as the Parliament of Tholouse, which hauing condemned Iohn de Naffes Register of Montauban to make honorable amends, would not giue way vnto an Order from the Councell for the referring of it to the Court of Castres. And againe, the Parliament of Bourdeaux in the cause of the inhabitants of Tartas, who in the surprize of the Castle haue bin cruelly vsed, outraged and expelled, haue bin pursued and ill handled in the said Parliament, which vpon the recrimination of the mutinous and seditious retained the knowledge of the cause to the preiudice of the Court of Nerac. In the Parliament of Aix, many of ours haue bin detained prisoners many yeares, though their causes were referred to the Court of Grenoble, and there retained according to the Edict. We desired moreouer that the alteration made in the Cities of Montault, Vareilles, Tarasson, Montgaillard in the Countie of Foix, (where nothing should be innouated, according to the Brieve of 1598.) might be repaired. That it would please the King to grant vs the Brieve for the custodie of places of suretie, with the deliuey of the gouernment of the places in Dauphine. To call in the Decree for the restoring of the Ecclesiasticall goods of Bearn. That the Towne of Priuas might be put againe into the hands of the inhabitants, and iustice done them of the riots, violences, and outrages committed against them. Besides an infinite number of other grieuances publike and priuate, too long to rehearse. In all the which we found our enemies strength so great, that all iustice hath bin denied vs therein, and all the answer we could get was an absolute command to breake vp our Assembly.

But when as the importunitie of the mischiefe and the necessitie of remedie forced vs to haue often recourse vnto his Maiestie. Then our Aduersaries began to stile our suite and humble petition reiterated, by the name of rebellion, that so they might not onely take from vs all hope of iustice, but also make vs odious. And to open a doore for warre and persecution, they obtained a commination of crime to be proclaimed against vs. (as if it were a crime to complaine) threatning aloud our persecution with the Kings sword, and causing burfall Edicts to be extraordinarily confirmed in Courts of Parliament for preparatiues for warre against vs. The King neuerthelesse out of his naturall goodnes and great inclination to iustice, putting by the violence of our enemies, promised vs by the Prince his Highnesse and Monsieur de Luynes now Constable, who gaue their word to the Lords Lesdignieres and Chastillon for our better assurance, that within six moneths after the day of our separation, the citie of Leytoute should be restored vnto vs, and the Counsellors received into the Parliament of Paris. The Brieve for the custodie of places of suretie, and the gouernment of those of Dauphine should should be deliuered vpon vnto vs. And the ouerplus of our complaints fauourably answered, and the answers truly executed; and that within seuen moneths after the day of our separation, the Deputies of Bearn should haue audience vpon that that they had to shew vnto his Maiestie. And in case these promises were not performed within the time, it should be lawfull for vs to meete againe, to re-demand iustice of his Maiestie vpon our grieuances. Now because that vpon the condition of these promises, vpon the assurance with the which they were set forth vnto vs, and vpon the true intent promised in the performance of the same, dependeth the maine iustification of our procedure following, for the which we are vniustly declared faultie, and dealt withall by the rigor of armes; let all the world see here vpon what ground we build our sinceritie and plaine meaning, and what right we had to reassemble our selues. For confirmation of the promise made vs to this purpose, we were shewed that it was the very first thing the King on his word promised to his subiects of the Religion, since he came to the Crowne. The Lord Constable, added that his comming in betweene, would be worth Brieses vnto vs, and happily more. The King himselfe out of his owne mouth confirmed it since at Fontainebleau to the Deputies that certified the King of our separation, in presence of the Lord Duke de Lesdiguiers, who had assured vs as much before. Had it now bin lawfull for vs to desire or imagine any better licence then the Kings sacred word, the first that euer he gaue vs? Paper and inke can adde no weight nor authoritie to a Kings word. And certainly we should haue held our selues vnworthy of our Kings fauour, and iniurious to his authoritie, if we had required greater assurance for this permission then his owne word. Thus our Assembly broke vp the 13 of April, 1620. after an Act drawne among vs of our obedience, containing all condicions and promises aforesaid, with order giuen to those of Rochell for the calling of another Congregation, if need should be, in such a place as they should thinke most convenient. The Deputies, after they had withdrawne themselves, and given account in the Prouinces, were continued, or others ioyned to them, to meete together againe, in case of vnper-formance of things granted according to the condition of the promises. This was done in all the Prouinces openly, to his Maiesties knowledge and the Lords of his Coun-cell. It was not misliked. The King made no declaration to the contrary. And yet this is most certain, that if there were any enterprise or attempt against the Kings authoritie, it was the nomination of the Deputies. But as that was acknowledged last full by permitting it, because of the condition: so also our Deputies Generall suing the performance of things promised, did nor sticke to adde alwayes this remonstrance to the Lords of the Councell; Do vs injustice, and saue vs the labour of another meeting. The Prince his Highnesse being diuers times present in Parliament to confirme the Kings command for the admission of the Councillors, shewed vnto them the permission we had to reassemble our selues, which they themselves occasioned by their refusall.

The execution of the order of restitution in Bearn anticipated, and an alteration made in the country of the suretie and libertie in Religion.

Now the prefixt time of sixe moneths for the performance of promises expiring, the 13. of October, without any effect, the King being gone into Guyenne in September, was solicited by our enemies to enioyne those of Bearn to execute the order of Restitution, and to confirme it in the Parliament of Pau. The terme agreed vpon for their remonstrances, which his Maiestie promised to heare from the mouth of their Deputies, extended to the 13. of Nouember: which caused the Parliament of Pau, vpon the Kings command, to order that the Deputies should make their remonstrances to his Maiestie, within the time agreed vpon. (confirmed again by a letter dated the 21. of September from his Maiestie to the said Parliament) otherwise the time being expired, the order of Restitution should be confirmed. His Maiestie not contented with this Decree, before the remonstrances of those of the country were heard, was put on by our enemies to go him-

selfethither: And although the Parliament by a second Decree of confirmation, had preuented his Maiesties coming; yet through the induſion of our enemies, he entred into the country with his armie:

We would here willingly conceale the diſloyaltie of our enemies, and the cruelties there practiſed by their inducements, if their calumnious accusations and the bitter anguiſh of our miſeries did not now conſtraine vs to open our mouthes for our owne iuſtification, and to call on vengeance before God and men: We will not ſpeake of the alteration made in the country, by the writing of it to the Crowne of France, though it be euident it was not ſo much for any aduantage to France, as to make way for the alteration of our Religion. We will onely touch in few words ſo much as hath bin done directly for the ruine of the Goſpel. The King then being at Nauarenx, and purpoſing to keepe his promiſe with Monsieur de Sales, made firſt at Bourdeaux, and ſince confirmed in the country, that he would ſtill maintaine him in the gouernment of the Citie, in conſideration of his long ſeruices, and the ready obedience he ſhewed by all manner of ſubmiſſion vnto his Maieſtie: yet for all this, vrged by our enemies to take the gouernment from him and giue it to a Papiſt, but withheld by the religion of his promiſes, the Ieſuite that is ſtill at his elbow interpoſing his counſell of conſcience (or rather without conſcience) perſwaded his Maieſtie that it was lawfull for him to breake his promiſe, by an equiuocation, truly deſeruing the indignation of God and men. Your promiſe (ſaith he) Sir, is either of State or conſcience. Of conſcience (ſaith he) it cannot be, for it is contrary to the good of the Church: Seeing then it is of State, your Maieſtie ought to beleene your Counſellours, who ſhew you, that for the good of your ſervice, it is neceſſary that this place be no longer in the power of an Huguenot. Thus the King led by the Maſter of his conſcience, who will be a ſuretie for him to God for all he ſhall do by his counſell, commanded Monsieur de Sales forthwith to reſigne his gouernment to Monsieur de Poy- and sworn enemy to those of our Religion. And then the Towne-garrison being first removed, and the inhabitants disarmed, there were brought in foure hundred souldiers Papists vnder Monsieur de Poyanes command. This done, to take away all that might yet any wayes secure those of the Religion, the six Captaines of the Parlians were cashiered, and the Townes of Sauueterre, Orthes, Oleron and Nai filled with Papist-garrisons. The King being come the second time to Pau, gaue the Bishops the presidencie in the Assembly of Estates there called, that so they might ouer-sway the whole country. And God grant he trie not the same experiment of their perfidie that chased his father thence in his infancie; and that the neighbour-enemies practises finde not in them a ready way into France through that doore where our fidelitie hath alwayes beene a bulwarke. Now that no part of the securitie and libertie of our Religion might remain vniolated, the Papists were made masters of all our Churches, notwithstanding the condition of the restitution it selfe, bearing this reuerua-tion, that the Churches should remaine ours till such time as others were provided vs. These alterations made out of hate to our Religion, and to banish it the country, so augmented their boldnesse who are continually raught and incited to mischief vs, that whereas respect of the Kings presence should haue restrained them, yet their licentiousnesse so overflowed, that wheresoeuer they came, our Churches could not be saued from infinite rauages and scandals, so far, that euen within the Citie of Pau (the King himselfe being there) after they had broken downe the pulpit and seates of the Church, they burned publikly the Bible and New Testament. The Ministers were in diuers places outraged, and diuers persons constrained against their consciences to kneele to Processions. The ouerplus of the inso-lences, violences and riots that this poore Country endured, was innumerable, and such as the most sauage enemies could exercise in the midst of a conquest. Hereupon for triumph Arnoux makes a booke, titled, The King in Bearn; where where, not able to containe himselfe for loy to see his designes so forward, he plainly shewes how far he purposeth they shall extend, and what we must expect will be the sequels of them. The King (by his reckoning) is not to surcease till he hath quite extinguished the Religion that hee so much abhorreth; and highly extolling him for this commencement and pursuit of the designe, aboue the late King his father; leaues to be vnderstood that the death of that good King hauing bin hastned for refusing to do as much; his Maiestie is to looke for more fauourable vsage at their hands so long as he will continue.

Bearn brought to this pitifull estate, the King vpon his returne left part of his army in Guyenne, and scattered the rest in Poictou, filling all our Churches with terror: And thenceforth no talk but of the ruine of all Huguenots. All the discourse at Court is of the siege of Rochell. They say, it is not a three moneths matter, they stay but for weather. In the meane while all the promises made at Loudun being neglected, the time past, and nothing performed, (saue the deliury of the Brieve for the keeping of places) notwithstanding the earnest pursuit of our Deputies Generall all this while; the congregation of Deputies nominated by the Prouinces (and bound to meet to present their requests to his Maiestie vpon the vnperformance of promises) as called at Rochell against the 25 of Nouember. We will not omit that after the alterations made in Bearn, the Towne of Leytoure was restored to a Gentleman of the Religion; but let all indifferent persons iudge, whether a Papist garison being left there; and, against the order of the former gouernment of the Towne, a Lieutenant established, that neuer had the approbation of the Synod of the Prouince, according to the intent of his Maiesties Brieve for the keeping of places of safetie, this be the square dealing that was promised vs. Againe, we leaue it to be iudged, whether after that the safetie of a whole country hath bin wrested from vs, this maine promise executed after such a fashion, and all the rest neglected and remaining vnperformed; our right of complaining of so manifest an abuse, and of these new and so intollerable grievances, dorth cease, whether the necessitie of it be diminished, & whether the libertie of access should be interdicted vs. Such then being the weight of the reasons why we should re-assemble our selues, and withall flie to the Kings iustice, hauing leaue so to doe; yet neuerthelesse we were scarce all met in this place, when as a declaration came forth, that made vs malefactors, denouncing wrath and iudgement of condemnation against the assemblers and assembled. But notwithstanding forasmuch as we finde that our grievances are so vrgent; that our consciences summon vs to fulfil the charge imposed vpon vs by our Churches; and that they witnesse vnto vs in sinceritie that we proceed according vnto iustice. We endeuer to present vnto the King our most humble remonstrances, to purge vs of the false accusations and crimes laid vpon vs by our aduersaries, who abuse the authoritie of his name to breake his word with vs. To shew vnto his Maiestie the vrgent necessitie of our iust complaints: To beseech him in all humilitie that it would please him to deliuer our Churches from so many alarms and frights as do now enuiron them on all sides. In a word, that he would shew himselfe our Protector against so violent an opposition as is generally practised against vs ouer all his kingdome, to the preiudice of the authoritie of his Edicts, and against the open threats of our ruine, which by the example of the calamities of Bearn are made more fearfull. But we finde that our enemies had stopt his Maiesties eares against all our requests, which are reiected; neither will any thing be receiued or heard on our side. And at the same time we are criminallie arraigned in Parliaments and other Courts of iustice. This Towne and all of vs are threatened with warre, as rebels and seditious persons. Whereupon iudging by experience of what is past, and by our enemies method, which to our cost we haue but too well learnd and experimented, that this accusation and these threats were to authorize a refusall and deniall of iustice since, and to make vs lose all hope of euer obtaining any thing hereafter in our most iust and necessary complaints; we insist at seuerall times on the iustification of our innocencie, and continue to beseech his Maiestie, and to lay downe our most humble petitions at his feete. But as all access is interdicted vs, and that to bring our proceedings into hatred euen with those of our owne side, and to saue diuision in our Churches, our enemies caused it to be told our Deputies Generall and diuers others among vs, that the King, though resolved to heare nothing from vs, would notwithstanding deale fauourably with his subiects of the Religion, and do them iustice. That he was willing to heare our complaints by the Deputies Generall, and in the name of the Churches. To trie what would be the effect of these words, we ceasse all pursuite in our owne name, are silent, and put it ouer wholly to our Deputies Generall, to follow it in their owne name and in the name of the Churches. And certainly we may boldly adde, that if the estate of our calamities increasing daily, and threatening worse, had not augmented our apprehension and iust mistrust, overcome with so many vexations, repulses, threats, and with despaire of any successe, we could desire nothing more then to retire our selues; and it may be our Churches would haue pardon-ed vs. But at the same time the fraud of our enemies did further discouer it selfe, and the persecution proiected against vs, breaking out in diuers places, hath manifested their designs by so many perfidies and outrages, that being forced for iustification of our innocencie and lawfull defence against the warre they make vpon vs, here to lay open their proceedings before the eyes of all the world, we would be scrupulous for the honour of France to publish deeds so odious, if withall it were not knowne that the authors of them are France's greatest enemies, and haue conspired her ruine and ours.

First of all, vnder colour of these faire promises, that the the King would keepe his Edicts made in fauour of his subiects of the Religion, and would satisfie their complaints of vnperformance of promises, my Lord Duke de Lesdiguières is drawne to the Court, by perswading him that his mediation would be a great furtherance vnto the businesse, and all the Lords and persons of greatest note among vs are entertained with the same hopes. In the meane while Monsieur de Montmorenci is vp in armes against vs in Languedoc, and after many acts of hostilitie, sets vpon Villeneuve de Berg a Towne of ours in Viarez. And because it was easie to be foreseene that this violence would meete with opposition, Monsieur de Reaux Lieutenant of the Kings Guard is sent from Court with apparent command to disarme all such as he should finde armed. Monsieur de Chastillon (whose prudence and affection to the Kings seruice and countries peace had hitherto withheld the peoples impatience, desirous to repulse the violence offered them) being informed of the said Sieur de Reaux his charge by a yeoman of the Guard whom he had sent vnto him, continued to stay our peoples commotion: and as he expects more particular newes from the said Sieur de Reaux, and of Monsieur de Montmorencis obedience to the command he brought, Villeneuve de Berg hauing withstood two scaladoes and diuers assaults at the gate, yeelding presently at the Kings name to the said Sieur de Reaux, and submitting it selfe vnto his protection and keeping, Monsieur de Montmorenci comming in, establisheth there a garison, which at the same instant committeth all kind of riots and outrages. Hereupon our men being induced to arme themselves for feare of the like frauds, and for the necessity of their owne defence. Monsieur de Reaux comming to Monsieur de Chastillon, and assuring him that Villeneuve de Berg should be restored, and vnder hope that according to the articles agreed vpon betweene them, all things should be reestablished in peace, hauing obtained that he should vnrme; whiles he was truly doing so, Monsieur de Montmorenci in stead of performing couenants, lodgeth five or sixe companies in Villeneuve de Berg, and proclaimes with a drum Monsieur de Perant Gouvernor thereof; and and moreover hauing dispatched diuers new commissions, dated the morow after Sieur de Reaux his arriuall there, he assiegeth Vals another place of ours in Viualets, where euen the said Sieur de Reaux himselfe, whiles Monsieur de Chastillon rested vpon his word, that Monsieur de Montmorenci should performe couenants, assisted in person, and was spectator of the battery. This little and weake place, without any defence but the inhabitants, hauing endured a hundred cannon shot, yeelding vpon honorable composition, directly contrary to the capitulation all manner of cruelties, violences and barbarismes haue bin there practised vpon an infinite company of poore innocent persons cruelly murdered or rauished. And againe, contrary to the said articles the like hath bin done at Valons a place neare vnto the other. These frauds and breaches of counterfeited contracts, do manifest vnto the world that the Kings word and apparent command, haue bin vsed but as a snare for our plaine meaning, and vnder a secret approbation of all that Monsieur de Montmorenci should doe to the contrary, to make vs lose those places.

Moreover at the same time Monsieur de Poyane hauing fortified himself in Bearn to beate out Monsieur de la Force, Monsieur de la Saladie is sent from the King to Monsieur de la Force to command him to dismisse those troupes that he kept by him for his owne safetie and to maintain the Kings authoritie in his charge of Gouverneur of the country against the violent enterprises of the said Sieur de Poyane. But the said Sieur de la Saladie in stead of carying backe Monsieur de la Forces answer to the King, as he seemed, went into Guyenne to Messieurs d'Espernon, de Vignoles, and diuers others to arme, so that in an instant all Guyenne was filled with troupes, besides those that were left there before.

On the other side, at the same instant the troupes left in Poictou drew neare vnto this Citie and S. Iohn d'Angely. And by order from the Councell all Courts of Audit for Receipts were remoued from all our places of safetie, where they were established; a palpable argument that though the citie of Rochell onely was threatned, yet all the rest were aimed at, by a generall desigine of warre against vs ready to be put in execution; this remouall being to no other end, then to take from vs the meanes of helping our selues with those profits in our owne defence when the persecution should come, which by consequent they intended against vs.

Now as by these new alterations of our peace, by these menaces, by the open oppression & persecution in so many places, we did foresee well enough the storme y hung ouer our heads and ready to fall, knowing besides y our enemies putt vp with their successe in the rauge & desolation of Bearn, did stay for nothing but a fit season to continue our ruine by an open warre; which was too easie to be leard by their open talke, vpon the returne from Bearn, of the siege of Rochell, of the meanes and facilitie of taking it. By the discourse which the King was houely entertained with of the ruine of Huguenots: by the calumnies laid vpon vs for a pretext; by the threats that followed; and by the preparations visibly made for that purpose. Neuertheless because there was some speech of the Kings good will towards his subiects of the Religion, and the authoritie of his Edicts, our Deputies Generall (to whose charge the whole pursuite was referred) presented vnto his Maiestie a bill of complaints, requesting satisfaction for some of the most important grieuances, with a speedier execution for the peace and safetie of our Churches.

But after many instances and delayes, after diuers solicitations and supplications of all the chiefeft among vs, euen of the Lord Duke de Lesdignieres himself present at Court, our Deputies generall could neuer obtaine any answer. Onely Monsieur de Fabas one of them, and a Gentleman that came vnto vs from the Lord Duke de Lesdignieres, hauing given vs to vnderstand according to a writing of the said Lord de Lesdignieres vnder his owne hand. That for all amends after so many complaints, my Lord Duke de Lesdignieres alignieres did perswade him selfe (for the King, howsoever our Churches were giuen to hope that he would maintaine his Edicts, did not here so much as passe his word, neither by mouth, nor by any Officer of State) that if we would first separate our selues, we should obtaine the retraite of troupes from all places where we did mistrust them. That the gouernment of the places in Dauphine should be searched and deliuered vs in six moneths if it could be found. That order should be taken for the payment of such sums of mony as haue bin promised them of Bearn in lieu of their Ecclesiasticall reuenues. That Monsieur de la Force and his sonnes should still hold their places. And moreover, that he was promised assuredly that nothing should be attempted during the time that should be requisite for the returne of our resolutions. But as we were about them, we were informed by Monsieur de Chalais the other of our Deputies generall, that the next day after, contrary to the said promises, our enemies had wrought the King to an absolute and open resolution of making warre against vs. That order was giuen for the leuying of an armie of one and forty thousand foote and six thousand horse. And that the gouernment of Bearn was taken from Monsieur de la Force, and giuen to Monsieur the Marshall de Tournemine; and the office of Captaine of the Guard which his sonne Monsieur de Marquis de la Fontehall, was giuen to the Marquis de Mauny, and that Monsieur de Marquis de la Fontehall another of his sonnes was commanded to leaue the Court.

At the same time, as our enemies hastened our persecution by all kind of mooues, as, seditious sermons, instructing of confessions & seditious libels, calumnies and impostures against our fidelitie, impression of the Kings hate to our Religion, and their declarations of warre published against vs, which haue wrought these effects. It happened in the citie of Tours the 29. of April last, that one Martin le Noir, (not long agoe, conuered to our Religion, for the which he suffered many injuries and reproches, so farre, that the people hauing made an effigie of straw, and sometimes calling it by his name, sometimes by the name of Martin Luther, did burne it publicly, and no iustice could euer be obtained for so outragious an insolence) died: and as he was caried to his graue, the people made a head, and after they had abused his corpe and those that accompanied it, after they had committed all sorts of indignities and inhumanities in the digging vp of his graue, seeking to do worse, stirred a more violent sedition. So that hauing broken down and razed a house neare the Church-yard, they run to the Church, being halfe a mile thence, they fire it, they enter the Sextons house, and they pill and ransacke it, and being increased to the number of a fearfull multitude, they continuethree whole dayes together in firing and pulling downe our Church, without the Magistrates interposition, and coming too late he was not able to repressle so raging a violence. From thence the example of this sedition passeth presently vnto the Towne of Poitiers, where the people transported with like furie, haue razed to the very ground the walls of the Church-yard where they of the Religion bury their dead, broke and battered all the sepulchers, and had committed the like violence vpon the Church, if the more carefull Magistrate had not stopped their course.

Now the order of our enemies counsels and actions hitherto, and chiefly these tragicall and horrid vproles, the great preparatiues for warre, the vniust and rigorous dealing with Monseigneur de la Fayette and his sonnes, contrary to the late assurance, with the troupes ready vnder Monseigneur d'Espernon command for the invasion of Beain, witnessed and shewed sufficiently, that the houre of a generall persecution was come, and that the designe of our ruine so long a hatching now appeared. Wherefore our enemies, that their perfidies might play their part and performe their vniust, promise that the King will see iustice done vpon the sedition of Tours; and to take away all insolation elsewhere, or to lull asleepe the more confident sort, they cause a declaration to be confirmed in all Courts of Parliament the 27 of April, shewing that though the King would chastise some of his subjects of the Religion (such as are termed rebels and seditious) yet he meant and promised to keepe his Edicts with the rest as long as they should remain in their obedience, and that he would maintaine and preserve their libertie and safetie according to the contents of the Edicts. And finally they assure Monsieur de la Force, that if he would leaue Bearn, he should no sooner send Monsieur d'Espernon word of it, but he should presently withdraw himselfe. Now we will shew what was the effect of these promises. We will begin with the last, which was first violated. After Monsieur de la Force had withdrawn himselfe, and had certified Monsieur d'Espernon of his disarming and retrait by the Baron d'Arros, presently Monsieur d'Espernon entred the country with his armie, and seized all townes and places where they of our Religion were most in number, filled them with strong garisons, razed the Castle of Montanay, and brought the people to such a lamentable estate, that most of them, yea the chiefest have bin forced to flie to quit their goods and country; diuers vnarmed and naked persons were murdered, and the rest remaine at this present restrained vnder a miserable servitude, suffering all sorts of iniuries and cruelties. On the other side, the King setting forward for the execution of the menaces published against this Citie, after he had spread abroad his assurances, that he went not against his subjects of the Religion in generall, and made particular promises to the Gouvernours of some of our places of safetie, that comming to them he would innouate nothing, passing by Tours, where the sedition being renewed and growne stronger, and the Commissarie sent to execute iustice, driven out of the Towne, the prisoners fetcht out of prison by violence, the houses of those of our Religion (who frightened with the first tumult had withdrawn themselves) pild and ransackt, onely the Kings reuerence violated, hath with much ado bin expiated by the execution of five poore beggerly rogues; (and that yet to entertaine their credulitie whom our enemies would feed with hope that the keeping of Edicts should be continued.) His Maiestie came to Saumur, where Monsieur du Plessis relying vpon the expresse promises made him, that nothing should be altered in the gouernment, and vpon the truth of the Declaration published three weekes before, hauing opened the gates of the Citie and Castle to the King, experimented to our great dammage the frauds and perfidies of our enemies, who induced the King to take away the gouernment from him, and to put a garison of foure hundred souldiers of his Gard in the Castle, and another in the Fauxbourg of the greene Crosse, and by this meanes to make vs lose this place of safetie. With what horror and indignation can all France see the enemies of her peace and the Kings seruice abuse thus perfidiously his name and word to commit these so detestable disloyalties? It is but ten moneths ago that by his Maiesties expresse grant, the keeping of places of safetie was continued vnto vs for foure yeares. Of all others, the citie of Saumur was one of the most important for our safetie. It had bin in our custody euer since the late King being King of Nauarre, requested by Henrie the third, came accompanied with those of our Religion to deliuer him from the captiuitie and tyrannie of the league. That Towne was giuen him for his passage; and it remained thenceforth in our keeping, as a token of our good seruices and fidelitie to this Crowne. This place seated on the Loire was to serue vs, in the persecutions and confusions which the enemies of this Estate haue now stirred vp, for a retrait or commodious passage for so many poore distressed flocks, to saue themselves from the future furie of fire and sword. This Towne during the praece of these later yeares, was a nursery of the Church, and was the seate of a flourishing Vniuersitie. For these causes our enemies crueltie hath caused the King to begin this warre, in the which they carry him headlong against vs, by this terrible blow, so great, that to giue it vs with greater facilitie, all the precedent calumnies, all the pretexes of disobedience and rebellion, all the particular declarations against our Assembly and this Citie, all fraudulent declarations and promises made in fauour of such as should remaine in their obedience to the King haue bin set on foote. For can it be said, that Monsieur du Plessis, whose long and faithfull seruices done to the late King and his Maiestie now reigning, are knowne to all men, should haue committed any act of disobedience or rebellion? Nay rather did he not passe all measure of confidence in the disloyaltie of our enemies, out of his respect to the Kings bare name? And hoping to auoide the storme that hung apparently ouer our heads, did he not himselse publish the benefit of that deceitfull declaration; and to make the first triall of it, opened with such confidence the gates of the Towne and Castle to the King? Wherefore the designe being thus vnmasked, our enemies were now pleased to manifest that it was intended against all in generall. For as soone as the King was at Saumur, newes came how that all the Protestants throughout all the principall cities of Normandie were disarmed. Were they also traitors? Or haue they since the Declaration committed any act of rebellion or disobedience? Besides all this, whiles the King was yet at Saumur, Monsieur Arnaut comes to S. Iohn d'Angely on Saturday the 15 of this moneth, to command the Lord Duke de Rohan and Monsieur de Sonbize to come to the King, who desired their aduice for the taking vp of the present affaires. This was done to two ends: first, that vnder hope of iustice, the great ones and common people of our Religion might be withheld as they haue bin hitherto, whiles the preparatiues for warre against vs were euery where a hastening. Secondly and chiefly, that there might be the lesse suspicion of the Kings troupes led by Monsieur d'Anriac, who the very next day entring the suburbs of S. Iohn with three thousand and five hundred men, assaulted the towne and gates, and would haue gone further, and taken it, if he had not found resistance. Was this Towne also guiltie of treason? Could the Towne be guiltie, and not the Lords of it? And yet the King writes to Monsieur the Duke de Rohan, as to his faithfull and affectionate seruante and his Lieutenant Gouverneur in the Prouince of Poictou, which surely he would not do to a rebell and traitor. What other crime then hath this Towne committed, to be thus assailed and threatened with a siege, and forced to expect before her wals the Kings cannon and armie, which maketh towards it with all diligence and speed? What crime also may the Towne of Iargeau (another place of safetie) haue committed, which was at the same time besieged, other then our enemies oath to haue no mercie? then the hate of our Religion, whose ruine they haue conspired?

This is that which we lay downe before the eyes of all our Countrymen, and not of them alone, but of all Christians, whom we here appeale vnto to iudge of our innocencie, and of the violent persecution that we vniuersally suffer. And though this true narration of our enemies proceedings against vs, and of ours towards our King, witnesseth sufficiently the calumnie of their accusation, by the which they proclaime vs rebels; yet that we may not leaue any shadow that might alienate from vs the fauour of good mens equitable iudgements, their compassion of our miseries, and their helpe in our iust and necessary defence: we can easily shew that as in vs there is neither appearance nor suspition of the crime of rebellion which they lay vnto our charge. God forbid that any one should thinke that the complaints which violence and oppression doth extort from vs, do any way concerne our King, in whom we acknowledge & reuerence with our hearts the image of God here on earth. But if laying vpon such as abuse his affections and conscience, the iniustice of the which we complaine, we would name who, and tell what they are that accuse vs, all France that groanes oppressed with the intollerable burthen of their tyrannie, would witnesse for vs that we should not speake it by way of recrimination nor calumnie. But it shall suffice our innocencie, that we onely purge our selues of the accusation. They accuse vs of rebellion and disobedience, and say that we kicke against the Kings authoritie.

Thanks

Thankes be to God, the Religion that we professe, and which we haue from time to time declared by a solemne confession presented to our Kings in witnesse of the puritie of our seruice to God, and the sinceritie of our obedience to them, hath long since acquitted vs of that imputation.
 We acknowledge no power on earth aboue our Kings. We sweare not to any other. We detest all doctrine that teacheth, that either directly or indirectly we may be freed from the allegiance we haue sworne vnto him. The holy profession of these principles, hath euer been the square and rule of all our fathers and our actions. When was it found that any of vs did bathe an execrable knife in the blood of our Kings? or ioyned swords with the great enemy to spill our countries intrailles? Or rather after so many wounds as France hath heretofore receiued from him, did not God vse our fathers armes to raise her euen from the graue? And now that the same conspiracie is newly reuiued, that they who haue sworne mortall hatred to our Religion, and with the like furie haue vowed the ruine and destruction of all the Estates of Christendome, and particularly of this Monarchie, governing at their pleasure the Kings heart and wil by their suggestions to his conscience, do induce him to hazard his State to vndo vs: we dare say, that time and experience will yet make him acknowledge that he hath not in all his kingdome a surer prop for his Crowne then our fidelitie. And certainly there can be nothing more plain to all such as looke vpon vs, then that the interest of our con-seruation is vnseparably nailed to the peace and tranquillietie of this kingdome, and strength of our Prince's authori-tie. It is vndoubtedly true, that according to the humane meanes that God vseth for the aduancement of his worke, the conseruation and growth of our Religion in this country, do wholly depend on the libertie and safetie of the E-dict's vnder which we liue; the maintaining of these Edicts, on the Kings absolute authoritie. Witnes the happie reigne of Henrie the Great, whom as God had raised in absolute power and authoritie higher then any other of the Kings of Christendome, so also vnder that prosperitie and greatness of this Monarchie, our Churches were sene to flourish and replant themselues, and the Gospell to fructifie with so great successe, that our enemies burling for spight, neuer left till they had perfidiously deprived France of this so absolute King. And though now for a pretext to invade vs and stirre vp warre against our Religion, they haue accused vs of disobedience; haue we done any thing else then complaine of the infringing of the Kings authoritie and Edicts, and demand redresse? And is there in this any shadow of rebellion against our Prince? We assembled our selues to demand iustice of him. Had we not need and right to do so? We haue already iustified it by the estate of our calamities, and the condition of the promises made vs. Haue we passed the limits of complaint? If being denied, we often returned, and diuers times endeuoured to lay downe our most humble petitions at our Kings feete; alas! who can distaste it, or blame vs, when we behaue our selues towards our King, Gods image vpon earth, euen as God him selfe hath commanded vs? And because many Deputies out of all the Prouinces, desirous to carry backe from the Kings bountie and grace the effect of his good wil towards vs, continued together, is it not a malignant and iniurious pettifoggerie, that to authorize a deniall of iustice, we should be accused of shadowing the Kings authoritie? And for a speciall president for the said deniall, our enemies alledge that the Parliament after the presentation of their bill, breakes vp, and stayeth not for an answer. But what proportion is there betweene vs and a Parliament? All our demands are particular. We demand not that such rules be prescribed vnto the State, or such new lawes and orders, wherein certainly the Monarchicall authoritie would be disparaged and quartered if the Parliament should do more then aduice. But all that we demand, is, that our burnt Churches may be repaired; that the exercise of our Religion let and hindered vs, be re-established; That Townes giuen vs by the King, and taken from vs by violence, be restored.

stored vs; That officers may be admitted; That children taken by force out of their fathers armes be given them againe; and the like. Wherein should the Kings authoritie be disparaged, if he should command out of hand that in euery one of these points iustice should be done vs? If a priuate man to whom an iniury is done, may iustly complaine of it, and expect iustice from the King; why, if the if the iniury be done out of hate to a generalitie, may not a generalitie do the same? Can there be then any greater iniustice then to accuse vs of rebellion and disobedience, because we complained and demanded iustice in this sort? any greater crueltie, then to persecute vs for this cause, and make warre vpon vs? But this is sufficient to shew that the far fetcht pretexes of our enemies are but coloured subtilties, to execute the old designe of making warre vpon our Religion, and to plunge France in confusion and trouble.

Wherefore considering the iustice & vrging need we had to haue recourse by our complaints vnto the Kings protection: The right and permission granted vs to reassemble our selues to that end in such expresse and solempne termes: the failing and breach of promises, caused by the fraud of our enemies. Their violence in hindring our accessse vnto our King, and in causing all our suites to be reiected. The iniustice of their accusation, and the slanderous crime of rebellion that they impose vpon vs. The disloyaltie of their proceedings considered, whiles they temporize vpon the refusall of doing vs iustice, that they might take from vs three Townes at once in Viuauez, by the fraud of a treatie and breaking their publike faith. The inuasion of the whole country of Bearn, contrary to such an expresse stipulation, and so fully performed on our side: And after that to commit such bloodie and inhumane acts of hostilitie. And lastly, this infamous perfidie considered, that vnder the shadow of a Declaration authorized with the Kings sacred name, & confirmed in all the Courts of Parliament of France, promising libertie and safetie by maintaining the Edicts vnto all such as should remaine in their obedience; the Towne of Saumur was seized on, where the gates were opened with so much obedience and respect vnder expresse and particular promises (besides the publicke faith of the Declaration) that nothing should be innouated. That by a like fraud and trecherie the Towne of Iargeau was at the same time inuaded, S. Iohn d'Angely assaulted, and now is in expectation of a siege. All Protestants disarmed throughout all the chiefe Townes of Normandie, to prepare them, alas! for a more easie slaughter. If all these things, we say, be rightly considered together, we doubt not but it will easily appeare that we suffer this persecution for iustice sake, and by the hatred of our Religion, which a generall conspiracie throughout all Europe now threatneth to destroy.

Wherefore being forced for the libertie of our consciences, and out of loue to our Country, to seeke in our selues, and towards the friends of our Religion and this State, a iust and necessary defence: we here yet againe present our selues with teares before our King, beseeching him in all humilitie to consider and beleeue, that the vowes and ardent desires that we continually powre forth vnto God in our prayers, are for the prosperitie of his person and State. And that it would please him to remember that our fathers taught by their Religion the true obedience due vnto their King, haue neglected the safegard of their owne liues, to further and aduance the labours of Henrie the Great, in the recovery of his kingdome, perfidiously sold and exposed to the enemy, by the very same pretexts of hatred and persecution against our Religion and vs. And that he would vnderstand, that we following our fathers steps, as heires of their affections, haue neuer forsaken the dutie we were borne to, nor refused the true obedience and ready seruice that our Religion teacheth vs to yeeld him. And would to God, Sir, that your Maiestie moved with the true interest of your greatnesse, and out of your naturall generositie, would for the setting of your Crowne and dignitie of your kingdome, turne your armes vpon the enemies of your State, and vse our fidelitie in the defence of such a cause.

We will boldly say for our selues, that in so glorious an emulation betweene your best subiects, we would cary away the praise from them all. But we say now with teares of blood; and in the bitterness of grones that teare our in-trals, that the enemies of your Crowne and person, Sir, ha-ving induced you to draw your sword against vs, and to bathe it in the blood of your loyallest subiects, will vndo both your Crowne and person altogether. They are your vndoubted enemies, that kindle your hatred against vs, to fire your Estate, and burie you in the ruines. Who hauing cruelly murdered the greatest King of the world, your glorious father, because he would not hate vs, and that his goodnesse and iustice did protect vs as his trustie subiects; do now induce your Maiestie to hate and destroy vs, to ouerwhelme your selfe with the fall of this Monarchie. And if in this tempest which they haue already stirred vp, and which we feele comming downe vpon vs, we are constrained for our owne defence and preservation to betake our selues vnto naturall remedies, we here protest, Sir, before God, before you, and before all men, that our purpose is e-uermore to preferue your authoritie and the respect of your obedience among vs; and that we will do our best ende-uours to saue your sacred person and kingdome from pe-rishing. God, who is the God of mercie and reuenge, and who according to the decrees of his counsell, sometimes hath powred out his wrath with diuers examples of horror on the heads of Kings and nations risen against him. Some-times hath preserved and reconciled to himselfe the grea-test persecutors of his Church, grant, according to our vows, that your Maiestie secure from all dangers, may acknowledge the Religion and fidelitie of those persons whom you now hate and know not.

In the meane while we call here by our most humble supplications all Kings, Princes and Estates interessed in the innocencie of good and faithfull subiects oppressed, but especially bound in conscience before God to defend the cause of his truth, And request them to prop with their

helpe and succour the weake defence that of necessitie we oppose to the many and puissant forces of our enemies, who hauing chosen this time of purpose, now that they haue set on fire the greatest part of the Estates from whence they imagine we might haue expected succour, hope to oppresse vs with greater facilitie. But our chiefeft trust is in the arme of the Almighty, who ouerthroweth the designes of nations, and blasts the enterprises of people conspiring against Israel. And since that for the glorie of his Name we are liated, and that to ouerthrow his truth our ruine is sought after, we assure our selues that he will make vs feeble the same deliuerance that our fathers haue proued by his succour, which we call vpon from the bottome of our soules. Keepe not thou silence, O God; hold not thy peace, and be not still, O God. For lo thine enemies make a tumult: and they that hate thee, haue lift up the head.
